Texas again leads state in new corporate projects

Texas once again has topped the list for new and expanded corporate facilities added in a year, according to Site Selection Magazine. With 1,023 new projects in 2022, the state had more than the next two states combined – Illinois and Ohio.

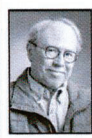

"Texas truly is America's economic engine, and we stand apart as a model for the nation," Texas Gov. Greg Abbott said, according to The Dallas Morning News. "When choosing where to relocate or expand their businesses, more and more innovative industry leaders find themselves at home in our state."

Two projects valued at $8.5 billion each helped snare the state's top spot: a chemical plant in Orange and a liquefied natural gas plant in Corpus Christi. They were followed by a $5 billion silicon wafer plant in Sherman.

"The Lone Star State's economy is larger than that of Canada, South Korea and Australia," Site Selection said in its March issue.

New court system for businesses proposed

A new court system devoted solely to settling business disputes is being proposed by the state's top three elected officials, though it has its share of critics as well. The Austin American-Statesman reported Abbott, House Speaker Dade Phelan and Lt. Gov. Dan Patrick in separate announcements proposed the creation of a specialty business court, modeled after the Chancery Court of Delaware. The court has been in existence for more than two centuries and has been emulated by a few dozen states. The specialty business court has been listed as a top priority of legislators during this session.

Abbott said the court would provide consistency in applying state law when businesses end up court disputes. A high-powered lobby group, Texans for Law-suit Reform, is backing the plan.

"Businesses today know the same case with the same facts can produce wildly varying outcomes simply based on which part of the state it's filed in and which judge is hearing it, and we know attorneys are telling their clients not to litigate in Texas because of this unpredictability," TLR spokeswoman Lucy Nashed Caffrell said in the Statesman story.

The judges for the business court would be appointed by the governor, according to House bill 19, filed last week. The president of the Texas Trial Lawyers Association called that problematic.

"The bottom line is that Texans value electing their judges," San Antonio attorney Laura Tamez said.

Texas again leads state in new corporate projects

Texas once again has topped the list for new and expanded corporate facilities added in a year, according to Site Selection Magazine. With 1,028 new projects in 2022, the state had more than the next two states combined — Illinois and Ohio.

"Texas truly is America's economic engine, and we stand apart as a model for the nation," Texas Gov. Greg Abbott said, according to The Dallas Morning News. "When choosing where to relocate or expand their businesses, more and more innovative industry leaders find themselves at home in our state."

Two projects valued at $8.5 billion each helped snare the state's top spot: a chemical plant in Orange and a liquefied natural gas plant in Corpus Christi. They were followed by a $5 billion silicon wafer plant in Sherman.

"The Lone Star State's economy is larger than that of Canada, South Korea and Australia," Site Selection said in its March issue.

three elected officials, though it has its share of critics as well. The Austin American-Statesman reported Abbott, House Speaker Dade Phelan and Lt. Gov. Dan Patrick in separate announcements proposed the creation of a specialty business court, modeled after the Chancery Court of Delaware. The court has been in existence for more than two centuries and has been emulated by a few dozen states. The specialty business court has been listed as a top priority of legislators during this session.

Abbott said the court would provide consistency in applying state law when businesses end up court disputes. A high-powered lobby group, Texans for Law-suit Reform, is backing the plan.

"Businesses today know the same case with the same facts can produce wildly varying outcomes simply based on which part of the state it's filed in and which judge is hearing it, and we know attorneys are telling their clients not to litigate in Texas because of this unpredictability," TLR spokeswoman Lucy Nashed Caffrelli said in the Statesman story.

The judges for the business court would be appointed by the governor, according to House bill 19, filed last week. The president of the Texas Trial Lawyers Association called that problematic.

"The bottom line is that Texans value electing their judges," San Antonio attorney Laura Tamez said.

Smith breaks down talking about Willock

Nate Davis
USA TODAY

INDIANAPOLIS — Former Georgia linebacker Nolan Smith was a font of enthusiasm and effervescence Wednesday morning at the NFL's annual scouting combine, gushing about his Bulldogs teammates and his own prospects as a potential first-round draft pick.

But it only took one question to completely change his demeanor and reduce him to tears.

"This is the first time I'm talking about it," Smith said when asked about the fatal car crash that killed Georgia teammate Devin Willock just days after the Dawgs won their second consecutive national championship.

"That's my guy," Smith said, his lip quivering. "I get sensitive talking about it just because I love him. And he never did anything wrong in his three years. He was supposed to graduate. Most people don't know his brother passed like that."

"No one should deserve to die like that."

Georgia recruiting staffer Chandler LeCroy was also killed in the Jan. 15 accident.

Later in the morning, following Smith's interview, new details about Willock's death emerged. The Athens-Clarke County Police Department issued an arrest warrant for former Georgia defensive lineman Jalen Carter, considered a potential No. 1 pick in the upcoming draft, in connection with its investigation into the incident.

Police said in a news release that they are seeking to arrest Carter for reckless driving and racing. Carter and LeCroy were "operating their vehicles in a manner consistent with racing" prior to the crash, police said.

Smith, who's been preparing for the draft and recovering from a torn pectoral muscle that truncated his 2022 season, has not returned to Athens since Georgia dismantled TCU 65-7 on Jan. 9 to win the College Football Playoff. And it was apparent his focus had helped him compartmentalize the grief.

Until Wednesday.

"Three years in a row, that man showed up (and) worked day in and day out. He's a two-time natty champ, man. And it's written in stone," Smith added, removing his glasses as the tears streamed down his face.

Nolan Smith talked about teammate Devin Willock on Wednesday at the combine. JUSTIN CASTERLINE/GETTY IMAGES

"Devin, I love you, baby. Seven-seven (Willock wore jersey No. 77), you living forever. 'Do it for Dev,' that's what I tell them boys at Georgia. 'You lost a brother. Do it for Dev.' I'm sorry to get emotional, man."

Smith was also asked about Carter's character, though not in the context of Willock's death.

"Man, I just want to go ahead and clear this up right now to y'all — J.C. is just misunderstood. He's probably one of my favorite teammates to play with."

"I love pass rushing with him. I just (love) being around him in the locker room. He's just an amazing friend."

For the balance of Smith's interview, he touted his other draft-eligible teammates and proclaimed himself largely recovered from the chest injury that he suffered in a 42-20 defeat of Florida on Oct. 29.

Though he only had 12 ½ sacks in four seasons, the 6-3, 235-pound Smith relishes the occasional comparison to Buffalo Bills pass rusher Von Miller and tries to pattern his game after him. Smith plans to do all the on-field drills Thursday and will also run the 40-yard dash but will not do the bench press.

"I play football," he said. "I haven't done anything in a long time. I can't wait to showcase my talents."

But Willock will doubtless be on his mind.

"Most people think it's just a game, man — those are my brothers I go out there with," Smith said. "It's more than a game... but, especially at Georgia, man, that connection piece is real."

New details emerge from ex-Georgia QB's arrest

ATHENS, Ga. — Two city of Dallas police officers found former Georgia quarterback Stetson Bennett walking around a gated area near downtown and the arts district when they responded at about 6:15 a.m. on Jan. 29 to a suspicious person call at a townhome on the morning he was arrested for public intoxication.

Bennett, who led Georgia to back-to-back national championships the past two seasons, was observed "walking further back in the gated area to hide behind a brick wall by a random (apartment) in attempt to possibly avoid (the arresting officers) detection," according to the police incident report released to the Athens Banner-Herald on Tuesday.

On the day of the arrest, Dallas Police said they responded to reports of a man banging on doors.

The request for the incident report was made on the day Bennett was arrested and charged with public intoxication but it was made public during the same week that he is among more than 300 prospects who will take part in the NFL scouting combine in Indianapolis.

Bennett was in Dallas to train for the combine where pro teams meet with NFL hopefuls and watch them work out.

According to the report, the officers announced themselves multiple times as Dallas police and called for Bennett to come from behind the wall with his hands visible. He complied and was placed in handcuffs due to Bennett attempting to hide from the officers.

Bennett identified himself and was unable to call his friend who police said he claimed lived at the location. He was unable to provide his friend's address. Bennett did not have a cellphone on himself to call his friend, the report said.

Patrick Kane trade: Who won the Blackhawks-Rangers deal?

Mary Clarke
For The Win
USA TODAY Network

Patrick Kane got his wish.

On Tuesday, the Chicago Blackhawks traded Kane to the New York Rangers after days of rumors. The list of possible contender destinations narrowed for Kane throughout February, but the Rangers were able to make the trade work after the 34-year-old forward all but demanded to be moved to New York.

Kane was one of the biggest names on the market ahead of the NHL trade deadline on Friday. With Kane off the market, it seems as if the floodgates are set to open on the rest of the pack as the days dwindle down ahead of the deadline.

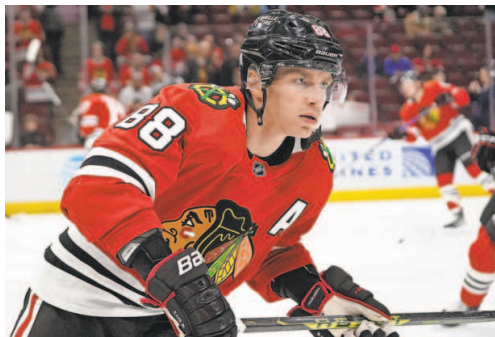

As the dust settles on this deal, let's break down the details of the Kane trade and give out grades to both the Rangers and Blackhawks.

The details

Despite Kane's status as a top NHL player, there aren't a lot of pieces going back to Chicago here.

- Rangers get: F Patrick Kane (50% retained), D Cooper Zech.
- Blackhawks get: D Vili Saarijarvi, D Andy Welinski, 2023 second-round pick (conditional), 2025 fourth-round pick.
- Coyotes get: 2025 third-round pick (from the Rangers).

The Blackhawks get back a 2023 conditional second-round pick and a 2025 fourth-round pick. The second-round pick can become a first (in either 2024 or 2025) if the Rangers reach the conference final, reports say.

Right winger Patrick Kane leaves the Blackhawks after 15½ seasons.

DAVID BANKS/USA TODAY SPORTS

Rangers: B+

Kane is not the player he once was. With 16 goals and 45 points in 54 games this season, it's clear that Kane is no longer the outstanding goal scorer and point producer he was in his youth. However, Kane's addition to New York's top six does put the Rangers up there with the Maple Leafs and Bruins in terms of pure offensive firepower.

Seriously, the lineup the Rangers will ice for the rest of this season is something else.

In terms of pure on-ice value, the Rangers added a solid top-six point producer for a very minimal price as they look to shore up their Stanley Cup aspirations. With the addition of Vladimir Tarasenko earlier in the month, general manager Chris Drury has done nearly all he can to bolster the Rangers' offensive production.

And yet the specter of Kane's past will sour this deal for many Rangers fans. In 2015, Kane was accused of sexual assault and rape by a 21-year-old woman. Kane ultimately did not face criminal charges.

Blackhawks: C+

Until Tuesday, Kane was a lifelong Blackhawk, with 16 seasons and three Stanley Cups under his belt. Now, he'll look to chase another one with New York.

The return for the Blackhawks is underwhelming, to be sure. It makes sense, given that Kane only wanted to waive his no-trade clause to go to New York, putting Chicago in quite a bind. The same happened to the Flyers last year when Claude Giroux only wanted to be traded to the Panthers at the deadline.

The Rangers very well could make the Eastern Conference final. It's nothing to write home about, but given how stacked the Rangers are, a first is a real possibility here.

For now, the Blackhawks will have to continue the long and slow process of a full rebuild. With very few pillars left standing from their championship years in the 2010s, a new era is dawning.

Ravens-Jackson stalemate getting risky

Jarrett Bell
Columnist
USA TODAY

All it might take is one NFL owner willing and able to bet the house on Lamar Jackson. Just one and the magnificently unconventional Baltimore Ravens quarterback could force the team's hand on whether to retain him at top dollar or watch him leave.

In another place and time, Jimmy Haslam could have been that guy. But the Cleveland Browns owner, whose fingerprints are inadvertently on the mess that has festered to the point that on Tuesday the Ravens slapped the non-exclusive franchise tag on Jackson, already has his market-setting quarterback in Deshaun Watson.

Hey, the embattled Dan Snyder probably has the stomach for such a move that would turn up the heat on Ravens owner Steve Bisciotti ... although the cash required for the type of fully guaranteed contract it likely would take to lure Jackson might be another issue.

But wouldn't that be quite the welcome-to-D.C. gift for new coordinator Eric Bieniemy...and maybe, too, for a new Commanders owner.

Arthur Blank? The Falcons brain trust has let it be known that it isn't interested in any Jackson sweepstakes, with several other teams following. But let's not forget that Atlanta was going to stick with Matt Ryan last year, then explore Watson — which doesn't happen without the blessing of the team owner — before Haslam blew away the competition with the five-year, $230 million guarantee.

If you're Panthers owner David Tepper, landing a proven playmaker would be a surefire way to inject relevance into the franchise that may or may not come with a yet-to-be-proven hotshot rookie quarterback.

Miami? If Stephen Ross flirted with Tom Brady, then you'd think that he could also envision the possibilities of pairing Jackson with his creative coach,

At the moment, Lamar Jackson is looking at a $32.41 million salary for 2023 under the non-exclusive tag. PAUL RUTHERFORD/USA TODAY SPORTS

Mike McDaniel. Of course, that might only be if the market for Jackson extends past the draft, which would put the Dolphins back in play for giving up the two first-round picks (in 2024 and '25) needed to sign him to an offer sheet.

And there's an opening in Las Vegas. Mark Davis, also reported in the past to be interested in Brady (now retired, by the way), can't be counted out. Can he? I mean, his late father, Al, had a thing for making bold moves. So, that DNA association alone can't be dismissed.

The owners, much more so than the coaches and GMs, loom as the real players in the drama that will determine whether Jackson has played his last down as a Raven.

Perhaps Bisciotti and the Ravens are playing the calculated risk that no other team would dare pony up to the point that would force Baltimore to make a decision on whether to match an offer sheet. Equaling one, however, might be difficult given that the Ravens are currently more than $9 million over the salary cap, according to OverTheCap.

If no offers come, well, NFL Players Association chief DeMaurice Smith might have a fresh case to take up on the total action of team owners.

Sure, any given GM might loathe the idea of blowing up his salary-cap ledger and parting with the two first-round picks needed to come with an offer sheet for Jackson (which the Ravens could match). Yet this rises to the level of owners, who won't be fired and have a perspective that includes brand value and cash.

Remember Bisciotti's reaction to Watson's deal last year? He knew that the full guarantee would shake up the landscape and make it harder to sign Jackson. And here we are.

The Ravens are willing to roll the dice with their franchise quarterback — the last first-round pick, by the way, of former GM Ozzie Newsome, who remains in the house as a senior adviser.

Meanwhile, the price for quarterbacks keeps escalating to the point that Patrick Mahomes is quite the bargain at $45 million per year. If Daniel Jones, the often-embattled-but-revived Giants quarterback, can be kept off the market with the four-year contract struck Tuesday for a reported $160 million (though well short of that in guarantees), then what does that make Jackson worth?

Maybe this wedge exists as much because of the principle of a fully guaranteed contract or the structure of a deal as much as it does the market-value dollars. Although Jackson has missed 10 starts over the past two seasons due to various injuries, it's not that the Ravens haven't been fully willing to use his enormous skill as a runner to their full advantage. No doubt, Jackson, 26, can sense that risk against the backdrop of long-term security.

After all, the 2019 unanimous NFL MVP has earned his leverage with results. No, Jackson hasn't won the Super Bowl he pledged to pursue. But it's still possible. And as the recent season illustrated, without him the Ravens offense is pretty much half-empty.

At the moment, Jackson is worth $32.41 million for 2023 under the tag. Had Baltimore used the exclusive tag, it would have cost $45.46 million.

It's fair to wonder whether a contract would have been done if Newsome were still the GM rather than his hand-picked and groomed successor, Eric DeCosta. Last week, Ravens receiver Rashod Bateman called out DeCosta on Twitter (in a since-deleted tweet), the type of gesture that would have been seemed unfathomable if directed at Newsome.

Still, it's also fair to wonder whether Jackson's decision to not have an agent is an underlying factor in the prolonged stalemate, regardless of the GM. Jackson's reasoning for not having an established agent was more understandable when he came out of Louisville, given the slotting of rookie contracts. The past couple of years, though, an agent could have been quite the buffer to engage in contract talks.

Now, agent or not, Jackson can hit the market and field his best offer.

Poor John Harbaugh.

It's no wonder, and no shame, that when someone asked Harbaugh last week whether he has thought about life after Jackson, he maintained, "Not very much. As little as possible, for sure."

Only now, like it or not, the contingency planning might be forced.

Tagged Jackson can negotiate with other teams

Nate Davis
USA TODAY

One of the NFL offseason's critical decision points was crossed when the Baltimore Ravens chose to place the franchise tag on quarterback Lamar Jackson. Yet Jackson received the non-exclusive tag. Not only is its one-year tender projected to be about $32.4 million — well shy of the $45 million value attached to the exclusive tag — it permits Jackson to negotiate with other teams. If he finds a deal to his liking, he can sign an offer sheet that sets his market. Then the Ravens would have five days to match the offer to retain him or would receive two first-round picks as compensation if declining.

Who may pony up? Eight intriguing possibilities aside from Baltimore:

- Commanders: They need a quarterback, Sam Howell and Jake Fromm the only ones under contract. This is a franchise that's long loved making headline-snatching moves to reinvigorate a fan base that's witnessed all of two playoff wins since Dan Snyder became the owner in 1999. But that's also the rub as Snyder appears to be in the process of selling the team and — in theory — an outgoing owner isn't going to pony up a huge chunk of money for a star who ultimately won't play for him.

- Dolphins: One year after answering countless questions about quarterback Tua Tagovailoa's ability, coach Mike McDaniel was talking about his concussion issues and long-term health at the scouting combine while ducking queries about whether the Fins will pick up his fifth-year option in the coming weeks. Jackson, who represents himself, is a South Florida native and might make financial concessions to come home ... assuming there's mutual interest, which would also require the Dolphins — currently projected nearly $18 million overpaid for 2023, according to OverTheCap — to do serious roster restructuring. With no first-round pick this year, Miami also would have to do maneuvering to make a play for Jackson, as the team cannot currently sign him to an offer sheet.

- Jets: As of Tuesday, it appears they're firmly focused on Plan A: Aaron Rodgers. He is hardly in the bag, and if the Jets can't land him — and NYJ GM Joe Douglas said at the combine that his team will pursue a veteran passer — Jackson could be the alternative. Douglas would also have cap work to do but could free up a nice hunk of change by releasing veteran wide receiver Corey Davis and/or pass rusher Carl Lawson.

- Texans: They've needed a quarterback since the falling out with former face of the franchise Deshaun Watson and have the plentiful cap room to give Jackson the deal he wants — and, per reports, that's something in excess of the fully guaranteed five-year, $230 million deal the Cleveland Browns awarded Watson last year. All that said, the Texans also own the No. 2 pick of the draft and would have to weigh whatever their interest in Jackson might be against their impressions of Bryce Young, C.J. Stroud, Anthony Richardson and Will Levis — and GM Nick Caserio and Co. are obviously guaranteed to get one of those players by simply standing pat.

- Colts: On some level, their situation loosely mirrors division rival Houston's given Indy is selecting fourth overall in the draft and would be guaranteed one of this year's hot passing prospects by merely sticking and picking. The veteran quarterback route also hasn't paid off for GM Chris Ballard in the four years following Andrew Luck's shocking retirement. Yet it seems owner Jim Irsay has become increasingly impatient, and Ballard may have to at least explore loosening the purse strings and spending the high-end draft expenditure for Jackson — behavior that would cut against his previous approach. And yet ... Jackson plus RB Jonathan Taylor behind what should be a top-tier offensive line and supported by a strong defense? Enticing to say the least.

- Raiders: Continuing to work down the draft order, the Silver and Black pick seventh, and coach Josh McDaniels has expressed desire to find a long-term solution after the team chose to dump Derek Carr. With $39 million in cap space, the Raiders have only slightly less cash on hand than Houston to frame up an offer for Jackson. The bigger question might be whether a quarterback who likes to run frequently will mesh with precision route runners like WRs Davante Adams and Hunter Renfrow?

- Falcons: They pick eighth. There have also been multiple reports issued from ESPN and NFL Network that ATL will not chase Jackson. But let's look at this logically. Third-round rookie Desmond Ridder hardly established himself as "the guy" during his rookie season, though he had only a four-start audition. This is also a team positioned to compete instantly in the NFC South with an established passer in the fold — and GM Terry Fontenot has more than $66 million at his disposal, more than any team in the league save the Chicago Bears. And for a team that typically plays second fiddle to the Georgia Bulldogs in its own market, wouldn't it make football and business sense to recruit Jackson and finally fill up Mercedes-Benz Stadium for NFL games?

- Panthers: They pick ninth. They lost out on Carr. Owner David Tepper desperately wants a marquee quarterback to solidify a team that nearly won the division despite all the adversity it dealt with in 2022. However, GM Scott Fitterer's cap is currently more than $3 million in the red, and it would be a heavy lift — perhaps even including the loss of one of his foundational youngsters — to make requisite room for Jackson in the Panthers' salary structure.
