MATURING OFFENSE LIFTS HURRICANES

With No. 2 Florida State on horizon, Miami picks perfect time to coalesce

Nicole Auerbach
@NicoleAuerbach
USA TODAY Sports

As the University of Miami (Fla.) quietly pieced together its recent three-game winning streak, two truths emerged. The first: True freshman quarterback Brad Kaaya no longer is playing like a true freshman, having completed 61% of his passes during the stretch for 567 yards, seven touchdowns and zero interceptions. The second: Junior running back Duke Johnson, the Hurricanes' workhorse, has gained 588 rushing yards and scored four touchdowns over the same span. He has rushed for at least 100 yards in five consecutive games, and he's closing in on Miami's all-time rushing record.

After Miami's 47-20 thrashing of North Carolina last weekend, Johnson told USA TODAY Sports the Hurricanes offense was clicking well and playing better right now "as a whole unit" than it had at any other point during his career.

Miami's use of a drone has proved influential in freshman QB Brad Kaaya's development.

The timing couldn't be better. The Hurricanes have a record of 1-10 in non-conference games next, at home Nov. 15. How did Miami's offense get to this point? Second-year offensive coordinator James Coley thinks there have been a handful of turning points.

One was Johnson's offense, during which he put on about 15 pounds so he could gain more yards after contact and become even more dependable after a broken ankle sidelined him for the final five games of last season.

Another was a tweak to practice, maximizing reps for offensive linemen. Though so much attention centered the season on the quarterback position, it was just as important for Coley and Co. to figure out how to replace the right side of Miami's offensive line. So they've made sure all the linemen get as much as they can out of practice.

"If there's a punt period, we'll have a power period with just the interior guys, the offensive linemen, the tight end and the running backs," Coley said. "They'll go through all the looks during that part of practice. In our practices, our linemen are working the entire time. Any time there's a special teams period, we specialize and either do a run period or a screen period."

In-game experience has helped the line, too, just as it has helped Kaaya. The four-star recruit said it was hard to replicate the college football experience, no matter how much 7-on-7 you play or how many preseason practices you attend.

"In games, you're seeing how windows open up, seeing how your protection works," Kaaya said. "It's hard to know exactly what that's like without playing in college football games."

Said Johnson: "At the start of the season, there was a lot more hesitation. [Kaaya] was kind of trying to play perfect, be the perfect quarterback — and that doesn't exist. He's just got to do what he's capable of doing, trust his receivers, just play football."

Kaaya has received help from the most technologically advanced turning point of the season. It came during the week leading up to Miami's game at Nebraska on Sept. 20.

"I bought a drone," Coley said. "I asked our video guy, 'If I bought a drone, would you fly it for me in practice right behind the quarterback?' We got our first footages of it, and they were unbelievable. You get to see angles and the depth and reads that you don't get with the regular cameras. We put a GoPro on it, and that's been a big part of our meeting with the quarterback group. I think that's been huge for us."

Coley says the drone has four propellers and hovers about 3 feet over the quarterback throughout Miami's practices, like a model helicopter. Footage is shown during meetings every day, as well as in clips he sends quarterbacks on Fridays to watch once they get to the hotel before game days.

"It's pretty cool," Coley said. "Some guys have the camera behind the quarterback, but this is a little different. You really get to see where he's looking. I think it's really helped out."

Since the Nebraska game, Coley has noticed a shift in his quarterback's performance and comfort level. He has seen that Kaaya is more confident checking plays at the line and calling audibles, which allows the coaching staff to trust him more.

When those audibles have resulted in big-yardage plays or touchdowns, teammates gained even more respect for Kaaya — and they, too, became even more comfortable with him controlling the game.

"They started noticing, 'Hey, this guy is for real,'" Coley said. "Once you've got everybody feeling that way, there's confidence all around. We feel very comfortable right now and very balanced, because our quarterback can get us into all of these plays. ... Some teams form their identity in training camp. For our guys, we started to figure out who we were in the Nebraska game. We're a dual-threat team. We can pass. We can run."

"It's an offense that's maturing right now."

MISSING VIKIANA MORALES

Nicki Minaj apologizes for video featuring Nazi-like imagery

Ann Olsenburg USA TODAY

Nicki Minaj is apologizing for her new video, Only, but the video's director isn't.

Some fans were upset by the "Nazi imagery" used in the video, including a swastika-like recreation of the Young Money logo.

On Monday, Abraham Foxman, national director for the Anti-Defamation League, slammed Only, saying it "disturbingly evokes Third Reich propaganda and constitutes a new low for pop culture's exploitation of Nazi symbolism."

Minaj apologized on Twitter

Minaj's Only video angered many.

Tuesday: "I didn't come up w/the concept, but I'm very sorry & take full responsibility if it has off-ended anyone. I'd never condone Nazism in my art."

In a statement to MySpace, video director Jeff Osborne said, "First, I'm not apologizing for my work, nor will I dodge the immediate question. The flags, ar-bands, and gas mask (and perhaps my use of symmetry?) are all representative of Nazism." But, he says, "a majority of the recognizable models/symbols are American... What's also American is the 1st Amendment, which I've unexpectedly succeeded in showing how we willfully squeeze ourselves out of that right every day."
