The Des Moines Register USA TODAY Network

DES MOINES, Iowa – Swimming star Ryan Lochte still has plenty he wants to accomplish in his athletic career.

He prefers to keep the majority of his goals to himself. But he can't hide the most obvious.

"Those are my goals – the goals that I want to accomplish in the sport of swimming," Lochte said. "So I'm going to keep them to myself and keep everyone guessing. The most important one, I think everyone knows, is I want to make my fifth Olympic team."

Lochte is in the middle of that quest. He's in Des Moines this week competing in the TYR Pro Swimming Series at MidAmerican Energy Company Aquatic Center at Wellmark YMCA. Lochte is one of more than 300 swimmers expected to compete in 28 events from Wednesday through Saturday.

Lochte, a swimming legend with 12

Olympic medals, 27 World Championship medals and a total of 90 medals in major international competitions, is one of the event's biggest headliners. And for good reason.

The spotlight has been shining on Lochte in and out of the pool for years. He's not just a decorated swimmer but one of the sport's most polarizing figures as a reality show star.

During the 2016 Olympics, Lochte was at the center of an international controversy when he falsely claimed that he and three other American swimmers had been robbed while in Rio de Janeiro. Lochte later apologized for lying about the incident, leading USA Swimming to suspend him from domestic and international competitions for 10

Lochte was suspended again in 2018 for 14 months for using a prohibited intravenous infusion.

Lochte says he's grown from the controversies.

"I've grown dramatically," he said.

Ryan Lochte has won 12 Olympic medals and 27 World Championship medals. ROB SCHUMACHER/USA TODAY SPORTS

"I've really grown especially in the past three years, four years since 2016. I think I've grown so much. My life has changed so much. I'm a different person than I was. It's just amazing - I'm so happy with everything that's going on in my life that I'm excited to see what's in store for later on in my next chapter of

His hope is that it includes the sport's biggest stage again. Lochte, who has been training in Florida, has been preparing for the Olympic Swim Trials in June. He said he spends his days swimming and weight training.

The rest of his time is dedicated to his wife and two kids.

The former reality television star said he's enjoying this stage in his life.

"That's basically my life right now," Lochte said. "I don't get naps or anything like that. It's basically swimming, going home and being a dad and a hus-

"I wouldn't change it for the world. It's the most fun I'm having right now."

The 35-year-old said feels great physically and believes he is still among the world's elite.

"I wouldn't be back in the water training this hard if I didn't believe in myself - that I could do it - beating my body up every day," Lochte said. "So I definitely feel like I do have a shot.

"It's going to be a lot harder than it's ever been in my entire life but I definitely believe I have a shot."

Fast pool lures Ledecky, Olympians to Des Moines

Tommy Birch

The Des Moines Register USA TODAY

DES MOINES, Iowa - Olympic gold medalist Katie Ledecky had never been to Des Moines before this week. But the decorated swimmer had heard plenty about the central Iowa town before arriving for the TYR Pro Swim Series.

Ledecky talked to plenty of coaches and swimmers who experienced the event's first run at MidAmerican Energy Company Aquatic Center at Wellmark YMCA last year. They all said the same thing.

They loved it.

"Some of my fellow national team members - I remember training with a couple of them at a training camp right after they competed in Des Moines," Ledecky said. "They were all talking about how great the energy was and how Des Moines really put on a good show and they really treated the athletes well. Word travels and we all talk about meets. I've heard it quite a bit."

Ledecky will experience it firsthand this week when the marquee meet returns. She will be one of more than 300 swimmers from around the globe, including world champions, world recordholders, Olympic medalists and upand-coming stars, who are expected to compete in the 28 events, which run from Wednesday through Saturday.

Des Moines is the third of five stops in the 2020 series, which includes events in Greensboro, North Carolina; Knoxville, Tennessee; Mission Viejo, California; and Indianapolis.

Katie Ledecky says of the TYR Pro Swim Series in Des Moines: "It'll be kind of a good launching point into the next block of training." KELVIN KUO/USA TODAY SPORTS

Des Moines' debut event last year was a resounding success for the city and the pool, which opened its doors in Things went so well that an elite group of swimmers are now flocking to Des Moines to take part in it this time.

Caeleb Dressel, a two-time gold medalist at the 2016 Olympics, will be on hand. So will Simone Manuel, a fourtime Olympic medalist, and Ryan Murphy, who won three golds in the 2016 Olympics.

Swimming legend Ryan Lochte, who has 12 Olympic medals and 27 World Championship medals, also will com-

Lochte, who was suspended for 14th months in 2018 for receiving an intravenous infusion, wasn't eligible last time, but he's heard the same rave reviews of Des Moines from his training partners.

"They went last year and they just said how the pool was really fast," Lochte said. "Just like the crowd and everything that it was a really good swim meet. I was a little bummed that I couldn't swim or partake in that last year, but I'm very excited to be doing that this year."

The headliner of the event might be Ledecky, a two-time Olympian and winner of six Olympic medals. The 22-yearold, who owns the world record in the 400, 800 and 1,500 freestyle, has won more World Championship medals (18) than any other woman in the history of

She has her sights on adding to that impressive resume during the Olympic swim trials in June.

Ledecky said the trip to Des Moines plays a pivotal role in her journey back to the Olympics, especially with the 2020 Games just around the corner.

"It'll be a good test," Ledecky said. "We have a couple more meets between now and the Olympic trials, but each meet is a good marker and a good chance to see what I need to continue to work on over the next couple of months. It'll be kind of a good launching point into the next block of training."

Lochte, who has been training hard in Florida, said he was anxious to com-

"It doesn't matter how hard you train in practice," Lochte said. "Practice is practice. "When you go to a swim meet, it matters about racing. And the more racing you do, the better you get. So any chance that I can get on those blocks and just race other people, it's better for

"I'm really, definitely looking forward to getting back into it and into the racing mode.'

While Des Moines won't make or break any Olympic plans for competitors, it should be a solid – and entertaining - show for swimming fans, offering a possible preview of the some of the events in Tokyo this summer.

After hearing so much about Des Moines, Lochte said he's pumped to finally experience it.

"I'm very excited to go to Des Moines and get some quality racing in and have fun." he said.

For an industry that loves to send bright young coaches up through the ranks, sometimes before they've proved anything on the court, it's somewhat puzzling that LeVelle Moton is still at North Carolina Central.

Moton, 45, is already responsible for the best stretch of basketball since the historically black university joined Division I, having won the Mid-Eastern Athletic Conference tournament four times with a possible fifth this weekend.

Even some of his former players are surprised he hasn't parlayed that success into a higher-profile job.

"We thought he was going to leave possibly going into my senior year because we came off such a great year and he showcased himself and was a hot commodity," said Jordan Parks, who was part of North Carolina Central's first NCAA tournament team in 2014. "He's a phenomenal coach. But it's hard to say because he has a strong bond with the university being an ex-player (at NCCU), being from Raleigh and doing all the things he's done. He wants to do culture-shifting things. He'd love to take N.C. Central and break that stigma of being just an HBCU basketball program.'

But there's another factor to Moton's longevity at N.C. Central beyond just loyalty: his contract.

Out of the 62 Division I coaches at a public school whose contract terms USA TODAY Sports obtained for its annual pay survey, nobody has a longer-term deal than Moton, who is guaranteed to make $325,000 annually plus bonuses through the 2030-31 season.

Though the reasons for extending Moton's contract out that far after another NCAA tournament bid last season are likely easy to explain, North Carolina Central declined interview requests with any coach or administrator to discuss Moton's contract. "(Moton) does not want to draw attention to the details of his contract," spokesman Kyle Serba wrote in an email.

Those details, however, are both publicly available and relevant in uncompeted in Division II until 2007 has rewarded a uniquely successful coach with job security that goes far beyond what his peers have been able to obtain.

After being elevated to head coach in 2009, he signed an eight-year contract on April 1, 2014, following the program's first NCAA tournament appearance. It was extended in 2017 for a new eightvear term, increasing his guaranteed salary from $250,000 to $288,000. But this time, it included a clause that Moton would automatically have a year added to the end of the contract (up to three years total) if N.C. Central won either the MEAC regular-season or tournament title. Finally, N.C. State sweetened Moton's deal again last spring after its third straight MEAC tournament title, extending the deal through 2030 with the same potential three-year rollover provision. Because of the Eagles' regular-season title, that means he will begin the 2020-21 season with 11 years remaining on his deal with a total of $3.575 million in salary guaranteed.

That level of commitment is justified, according to former player Kyle Benton, because Moton has proved the ability to sustain that success even though the derstanding how a small school that roster changes significantly nearly every year. "The last three years there were times me and former players would look back and say, 'Hey, is this team going to be the same? But when MLK Day comes around, he says that's when his teams start to click," Benton said. "What has happened is North Carolina Central has become that target school people are either really scared of or really prepared to play. It's the other teams' championship game."

The success has given Moton the leverage to secure other contractual perks, including a courtesy car and a clause that was added in 2019 to pay for travel accommodations for his wife and children to half the team's road games and all postseason games.

Moton can earn a $1,000 bonus for every athlete who graduates within their five-year NCAA eligibility clock, $4,500 if the team reaches a 950 APR or a 3.0 GPA, $4,000 for winning 20 games, $7,500 for a MEAC regular-season title and $15,000 for winning the conference tournament.

But Moton's biggest potential bonus comes in the form of a one-time payment equal to 20% of the net revenue (minus travel expenses) N.C. Central collects for playing non-conference guarantee games if that total number reaches $250,000. Last year, under slightly different contract terms than he has in his new deal, that payout to Moton totaled $44,244.58.

The long-term commitment Central has already made could pay off if it keeps him around a few more years.

"He just knows what he's doing," Parks said. "He knows who to recruit, who fits into his program. He's not always looking for the best player, he's looking for the guy who is going to buy in and he'll showcase what it is you do well. I really think he has a few steps ahead of the other programs where he just knows how to get it done and what it takes to win. I truly believe he can do it at any level, not just the MEAC or HBCU level.'

Often it's a struggle for coaches at HBCUs to get attention from schools in higher-level conferences, largely because the number of guarantee games they have to play to make their budget distorts their record. This season the Eagles started 3-10 playing against the likes of Georgia, Louisville and Wofford before proving themselves as MEAC's top team with a 13-3 league record.

Few know that reality as well as Cy Alexander, who won a combined six MEAC tournament titles at South Carolina State and North Carolina A&T before retiring in 2016. Alexander interviewed for numerous jobs over the years that would have paid him more money and given him a bigger platform but always found himself as the runner-up in those searches. He wonders if the same stigma has been attached to Moton.

"I don't think he loses a lot of sleep because he hasn't gotten that opportunity," Alexander said. "At some point maybe you say to yourself, 'I can keep winning championships and make history at my alma mater and I've taken care of my family real well.' That's what happened with me, and at some point you say make the best of where you are. You can become so frustrated that it takes your eye off the prize and the prize is still to try to win championships.

"But he deserves that opportunity. He's a great tactician and a genuine high-level Division I college basketball coach. He could coach at any level, and he's proven that with the success he's
